Why the OnlyFans Model Who Allegedly Killed a Man Must Be Freed Immediately

Featured

THIS WIFE AND MOTHER NEEDS TO BE FREED IMMEDIATELY.

Wife and mother Michaela Brashaye Rylaarsdam, 31, who moonlights as an OnlyFans model, has been charged with involuntary murder two years after a requested BDSM-ish session with a 56-year-old client went south. Although he did die in her presence, this mother and wife should not have been charged and must be freed immediately.

In March of 2023, the John Michael Dale saw an ad of Michaela on an unnamed website, and somehow reached out to her. They had not met previously, but she responded to him.

Soon, they began trading texts, some of which were odd from Dale. He asked Michaela to glue boots onto his feet. He followed up with a link to Etsy leading to dildos for her to purchase.

As reported by law enforcement in court, Dale wrote, "I was thinking of something like this, six inches long, that you could put down my throat before you glue my mouth shut." In a barrage of three more texts, he says, "I have been seriously thinking about you gluing my eyes shut at the end."

Your Friends Say You're Glowing, and Science Says You Literally Are

When your friends said you were glowing, I bet you didn't think science would be there to second that. But science says you're literally glowing, and what it means for life is wild.

Why You Glow

According to Popular Mechanics, scientists have confirmed that "You are glowing right now. And when you die, that light disappears." This glow is made by what is known in science as biophotons or ultraweak photons. At the University of Calgary, scientists have analyzed these photons in mice before death and after death. They found the glow rapidly dimmed when an organism died.

For anybody doubting the science, the senior author of the study Dan Oblak has something to say. "The fact that ultraweak photon emission is a real thing is undeniable at this point. This really shows that this is not just an imperfection or caused by other biological processes. It's really something that comes from all living things," he reportedly told New Scientist.
